Dear George,

I've been told that Breo of JAMA and Hosty who, less than any other FBISA has cause for yapping about anything, both have books due.

The Post will probably get review copies.

If it does not intend to use them I'll appreciate them so I can go over them as soon as possible.

I have a hunch about Breo and JAMA, only a hunch, no knowledge. I think that although it has been publicly silent the AMA is embarrassed by what JAMA did and may or perhaps even may have seen fit for those involved in it to go away.

If true that should be a story.

And, of course, a promotion for NEVER AGAIN!

Something the publisher never did for it.

Thanks and best,

Harold

Those JAMA stories cost JAMA's insurer $250,000 in settlement plus a massive legal expense.
